BC has been awarded $100,000 from the National Endowment for the Humanities to complete a three year project titled, "Energizing Humanities in California's San Joaquin Valley." Complementing the local legacy of energy production, Energizing Humanities in California's San Joaquin Valley examines the concept of energy broadly from historical and literary perspectives, as well as the intersection of humanities with music/performing arts. The three leading faculty involved with this project are Oliver Rosales, History; Andrew Bond, English; and Josh Ottum, Music.

Student Employee Survey and Focus Group Findings

In the fall of 2016, Bakersfield College hired 520 student employees. Of those students, 179 (34 %) were returning employees and 341 (65%) were new hires. The average GPA for student employees in fall 16 was 2.91. In order to gain perspective into the students' experience as employees of the college, a survey was deployed, followed by a focus group. Student focus groups were conducted and below are a few quotes:

“My job gave me many opportunities to get involved. It has forced me out of my comfort zone to being seen in the public eye” (Focus group, Student B).

“I would recommend campus employment [to others]. Other places don't care about school work as BC does. I learned a lot, this is my first job and helping others in this job makes me feel good about myself. It offers the opportunity to interact with faculty and staff on a personal level” (Focus group, student D).

Overall, students claimed that campus employment helped them to maintain oral, written, and critical thinking skills while also developing a sense of identity and commitment to the campus. One student identified that their current position is their first job (student D) and they have learned to grow professionally while also engaging with their role as a student.
